The New York art season starts off with a gallop this week. Richard Benson's "North South East West," 30 multiple-impression inkjet prints taken during road trips around the country in his Airstream, "The Giraffe," premieres today at Pace MacGill Gallery on Fifty-seventh Street. A pioneer of printing technology, Benson's quirky, vivid, and utterly natural photographs reveal a highly original portrait of America. As Peter Galassi, MoMA's former chief curator of photography says, Benson's "pictures look the way the world feels."
